LEGIS Congressional Fellows Program

Administered by The Brookings Institution

|--------------------------|--|
| Objective: | The LEGIS Congressional Fellowship is an ideal opportunity for emerging leaders at federal agencies. The goal of this program is to develop executives who have in-depth knowledge of the legislative process and who understand trends in the legislative environment. LEGIS Congressional Fellows experience firsthand the procedures and politics of Congress. As a result, they learn to plan, to manage, and to lead the legislative objectives of DOE more effectively. |
| Eligibility: | Nominees must be at the GS-13 or equivalent or higher in grades and must have at least two years of service in the executive branch. |
| Program Overview: | The LEGIS Congressional Fellowship is an exceptional learning and development opportunity available to a select group of government executives who have the demonstrated capacity to be effective and superior leaders. Nominees accepted for a fellowship will gain direct and personal experience in the processes and politics of Congress during seven or twelve month assignments on Capitol Hill, working in the office of a Member of Congress or serving on the staff of a congressional committee. Duties are substantive and wide ranging. They may include, but are not limited to drafting legislation, briefing members of Congress, serving as a constituent liaison, planning and participating in committee hearings, and more. As a participant in this program, you will develop superior strategic planning skills, new leadership capabilities, and rare political acumen. You will gain in-depth knowledge of the policymaking process and will build a strategic and competitive advantage for DOE when you take home your newly developed understanding of the legislative world. |
| Components: | Each fellowship period begins with an intensive two-week orientation to the operations and organization of Congress conducted by Brookings staff and experts on congressional affairs. This orientation prepares Fellows for their Capitol Hill assignments by providing information and instruction on topics such as: the legislative and budget process; the committee system; executive-congressional relations; and keys to being an effective congressional staff member. Over the course of the program, Fellows' work will be substantive and wide-ranging, and may include drafting legislation, briefing Members of Congress for votes, participating in committee hearings, or interacting with constituents, businesses, trade associations, lobbyists, or public interest groups. During their assignment, Fellows learn how to effectively manage and lead legislative objectives for their Member or committee, and gain exposure to U.S. domestic and international policy debates. This experience will enhance Fellows' understanding of the role of the media, lobbyists, associations, and corporations, and will allow them to develop a network of contacts, including national policymakers, opinion leaders, federal managers and public and private sector organizations. The full-time assignment (for seven or twelve months) will be on the staff of a member of Congress or a congressional committee in Washington, D.C. |
